Director, International Centre for Dispute Resolution (AAA-ICDR)

The ICDR released its amended International Dispute Resolution Procedures in 2021. The amended rules provided the need to create guidelines in relation to the use of Tribunal Secretaries in ICDR international arbitration cases. The guidelines are intended to aid the parties, their counsel, and the arbitrators in determining what duties a tribunal secretary may or may not perform in an international arbitration proceeding. Members of the same rule committee transitioned their work towards the creation of these new guidelines. This session will be a discussion of these guidelines and their implementation in ICDR cases. The global economy, commercial relationships, and technology are always changing. As they change, how will cross-border dispute resolution change? Will there be new modes of dispute resolution? Will the balance of commercial relationships continue shifting towards Asia, Latin America, and Africa and, if so, how will the new stakeholders change arbitral procedures? How will the mixture of civil law and common law concepts and procedures now present in international arbitration change over time? How will technology impact the presentation of evidence in the future? Presenting Organization: California Lawyers Association, Litigation Section, and California Arbitration

Parties to transactions with Mainland Chinese elements will need to consider means of protecting their interest in Mainland China. The Hong Kong-Mainland China Arrangement on Interim Measures (the "Arrangement") provides an unprecedented regime for parties to foreign-seated arbitrations to access Chinese court orders to preserve assets, evidence and conduct in Mainland China. The Arrangement allows the Mainland courts to grant interim relief in aid of arbitrations seated in Hong Kong and administered by a qualified institution. Hong Kong is the only seat outside of Mainland China where parties to arbitrations may obtain interim relief from the Mainland courts. This webinar ...

Stakeholders in international arbitration seemingly agree that greater diversity is needed – but the question has been how to make it happen? Remote working has eliminated many of the challenges presented by geographic boundaries, creating access to a wider pool of arbitrators. What additional mechanisms are needed to produce and support the opportunities created by increased access, and what type of collaboration needs to exist between institutions, law firms, clients and practitioners to monitor progress? In a series of JAMS led programming in 2021, diverse stakeholders explored how action requires commitment and provided a platform for new initiatives to harness ...
